

Life is about planting seeds

Life is about planting seeds. When you see that life is about planting seeds like thoughts in others, in the hope that they cherish your gift, feed it and eventually when it blossoms into the big picture, share with you so both can enjoy the journey. You then have no attachment to your words and what you want to share. For each person sparks in other the chance to learn, to grow, to be all they can be, and it is only those who want to share will see the magic when blossomed. If you treat every moment as a chance to share great insights, learn from everyone you meet and share the great insights when fully blossomed, you live a life as spirit, free flowing energy, enjoying other soul energies to experience in a physical body. You bring the joy when both the body and soul becomes one in the experience of life. So open your mind to possible seeds your planting plus nurturing to grow into an amazing experience. For if you decide not to listen, not to feed your seed or be open to the magic as it grows through experience, you will not see a new world that opens before your eyes. Because you will miss the opportunity to grow, to experience to enjoy the fruits of your labour. For it is not just you that you starve from feeding but all those who want to share, want to enjoy the growth of your seed, in the hope that one day you both come together to sway in the breeze and feel the magic as you become one. It is only when shared do we see all we can see, be all we can be and alone we miss out on planting, growing and sharing the journey of experience, and so we lose the chance to become one with the source. So the next time you're not listening, interrupting and wanting to control another remember that without their seed, you cannot be all you could be. So start loving yourself, allow people to share their knowledge, know every meeting is a chance for a new you, if only you take time to listen, grow and share life experiences.
